

A Commitment To Our Community

The Ross companies have a commitment to the local community. We open our doors to our neighbors by holding facility tours and open houses and through our speakers' bureau.

Public meetings enable community members to learn about proposed changes at the Ross Incineration facility and to provide comments to the United States and Ohio Environmental Protection Agencies about our operations.

We play a meaningful role in the local community through associate volunteerism with organizations like Rotary, Kiwanis, and the United Way. And, the Ross Foundation, Inc. supports educational programs in Lorain County and in the Midview Local School District.

In Compliance With EPA Regulations

The Ross companies perform an important service for customers and the public in accordance with stringent Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) regulations.

Working together, the Ross companies and our customers help control hazardous wastes from their point of generation until they are treated and disposed of safely.

Ross Incineration's operations are monitored by the Ohio EPA through their on-site inspection program which helps to ensure the company's compliance with regulations.

In addition, continuous monitoring and regular testing demonstrate that our system meets EPA's requirements for safe waste treatment.

WHAT WE DO MATTERS

At the Ross companies, WHAT WE DO MATTERS.

Every day, we protect the environment by safely and efficiently managing thousands of gallons of hazardous waste and preventing them from causing environmental harm.

We provide a needed and necessary service to manufacturing companies, recycling firms, remediation contractors, hospitals and universities. As they produce products and provide services, they also generate waste materials. Proper transportation and treatment of these hazardous waste by-products by the Ross companies helps to keep this country's factories, refineries and recycling firms operating to produce the goods and services that we need.

We play an important role in the local community by providing jobs, tax dollars and resources. Through contributions, volunteerism and local involvement, we are working to make a difference. We have a commitment to our community because, as local residents, we care about our community.

We are an essential part of the industrial infrastructure of the State of Ohio that helps to attract and retain businesses and strengthens our economy.

WHAT WE DO MATTERS because, at the Ross companies, we are not only concerned about the community and the environment, we are doing something to improve them every day.

Local Ownership For Close To 60 Years

The family of Ross companies was founded in 1949 when Bob and Ada May Ross began operations on their family farm in Eaton Township.

Bill & Maureen Cromling

Today, the companies remain locally-owned and operated by Maureen Ross Cromling and her husband, Bill Cromling II.

They are actively involved in the companies' operations and in the local community.

As involved residents of the local community and as business owners, their commitment to protect the community and the environment is at the heart of how we do business at the Ross companies.

Utilizing The Best Available Technology

The Ross companies have a history of reinvesting in their facilities and equipment to incorporate the best available technology and to remain in compliance with regulations.

Ross Transportation regularly updates its equipment in order to have the safest and most efficient transportation vehicles on the roads today.

Ross Incineration has invested more than $50 million over the past 20 years in its operations. Most recently, the company completed an $11 million project when it replaced its air pollution control equipment in 2002.

Ross Environmental also made a major investment with the building of its Business Center at the Great Lakes Technology Park in Elyria. The Business Center provides the latest tools for Ross associates to better serve customers.

By building this state-of-the-art office and training facility in Lorain County, the Ross companies reaffirmed their commitment to helping the community grow and prosper.

A Great Place To Work With Great People

While we have one of the best systems in the world to transport and treat hazardous wastes, our associates are what truly make a difference in our operations.

Our associates are a select group of men and women who are hired for their ability to do the job right, to work safely at all times, and to learn new procedures. We are experienced, well-trained and hard working.

As local residents, we are concerned about safety and the quality of life in our community. We care about the community and the environment and work hard every day to protect them.

WHAT WE DO MATTERS to our coworkers, our community and our families.
